The Entrepreneurship, Management, and Marketing (EMM) Department faculty and students were busy during the 2014-2015 school year. As we prepare to start a new school year on August 17th, we’ve included a few highlights about last year in this end-of-summer newsletter.

First, the Brock School of Business earned reaccreditation from the AACSB this year. Several EMM faculty members, including Associate Dean Chad Carson and Assistant Dean Barbara Cartledge, were heavily involved in this process. This achievement means that the Brock School maintains its place among the top five percent of business schools worldwide that have this accreditation.

Second, Brock students continued to demonstrate their business expertise in multiple ways locally, around the U.S., and internationally. For example, they competed in international competitions as well as presented research at NBA headquarters and an international conference (see page 2).

Third, we moved into the new Brock School of Business building on August 5th. The building has state-of-the-art facilities including a new Student Business Incubator (see page 5).

The biggest curriculum news is that Brock Business students can now add a Professional Sales concentration to any business major, making this the third concentrations offered by the Brock School (Sports Marketing and Social Entrepreneurship are the other two). The program has already received recognition as a “Notable Program” by the Sales Education Foundation (see page 5).

We invite you to read about this exciting year in the following pages. Thank you for your continuing support, which makes many of these accomplishments and initiatives possible.
Student News

Brock School of Business students competed successfully in several competitions during the 2014-2015 school year.

In January, graduate students Rebecca Gornto and Amanda Strength traveled to Tampa to compete in the 2015 USASBE Student Case Competition sponsored by Baylor University. They presented a case written with fellow students, Jennifer Hughes and Anna Katherine Weathington, in the MBA 531 class during the summer. They won second place and $1000 with their case, "Collage Consignment," which details growth options for the Vestavia Hills business owned by Brock School alumna, Tracey Dimukes (MBA, 1991). This marks the fifth consecutive year the Brock School has had at least one finalist in this competition, making it the only school to have achieved this impressive record. Other finalists this year were the University of South Florida, University of Tampa, University of San Francisco, South Dakota State University, and ICFAI Business School (India). (See http://bit.ly/1IprMsD, page 23).

In April, four Samford students traveled to Fort Worth to compete in TCU’s Richards Barrentine Values and Ventures Business Plan Competition. Clay Hubbard, Abby Colella, Rachel Laster, and Madison Kerns competed against 47 other teams from around the world, presenting the business plan they wrote in ENTR 486: Social Entrepreneurship. Their plan detailed how their business, Fish Camp Films, will provide opportunities for students in Woodlawn to learn how to make commercial videos for Birmingham companies. They placed second in their division, which also included teams from Florida State, Georgetown, Syracuse, and UC-Irvine, and then competed in the semifinal Lightening Round.

In May, the Brock School hosted the seventh annual Regions New Venture Challenge. In the Open Division, Warren Handrahan won first place and $7,500 for his lawn service company, Specialist Landscaping. ZenVerse, a social media company for people who like posting quotes, won second place, and Zion Designs, a faith-based flash tattoo company, won third place (See http://bit.ly/NVC2015news).

In the BUSA 100 (Freshman) Division, Class Cab, a campus-based transportation company, won first place and $2,500. Blended, a healthy smoothie company, and Impressions, a customizable cell phone case maker, won second and third, respectively (see http://bit.ly/bpcomp).
Every semester, we send a new group of outstanding graduates out into the world, and this Spring semester was no exception. Some of our top EMM graduates in May 2015 included:

Madison Kerns, who doubled majored in entrepreneurship and management and took the social entrepreneurship concentration, received an Outstanding Service Award from the Brock School. Madison served the Brock School as a member of the Dean’s Student Advisory Council and president of INVEST. She also served on a team in the ENTR 485: Entrepreneurship class that conducted a consulting project for the city of Vestavia Hills examining whether the city should open a business incubator.

In 2014 and 2015, she competed in both the Regions New Venture Challenge and the TCU Values and Ventures Competition, making her the first student to compete in both competitions twice. As part of these competitions, she helped write and present business plans for Work of Worth, a fair-trade company in Birmingham that she helped launch last year, and Fish Camp Films. She is currently working with the Akola Project, a nonprofit organization with the mission of empowering women in Uganda.

Our Outstanding Seniors by major were:

Entrepreneurship:
Kelsey Robinson (Kadoma, Zimbabwe)

Management:
Anthony Hauguel (Birmingham, AL/U.S. Navy (retired))
Kate Lee McDonnell (Jackson, MS)

Marketing:
Madison Schneider (Spanish Fort, AL)

Our Outstanding Senior Business minor was Abby Colella, a journalism/mass communications major and social entrepreneurship minor from Athens, AL.
Students Conduct and Present Cutting-Edge Research

Brock School faculty members present their research annually to organizations and at conferences, but students often are also involved in cutting-edge research. Some examples from this past year include the following:

Will Cavanaugh, Brent Hansen, Matt Johnson, Damon Waller and Daniel White worked on their capstone research project in sports marketing during the spring 2015 semester, which focused on strategies the National Basketball Association (NBA) could use to foster fan engagement by the millennial generation. In March, they traveled to NBA headquarters in New York City to present four recommendations to Mr. Jason Kaufman, the NBA’s vice president of market research and analytics. They were also able to enjoy visits to other sights, including Major League Baseball headquarters, where they were hosted by Brock School alumnus, Giovanni Hernandez (third from the left in the picture to the right, see http://bit.ly/1IprMsD, page 20).

In June, Caroline Novkov, Blake Gardner, and Brooks Hanrahan traveled to Ottawa, Ontario to attend the North American Society for Sport Management (NASSM) Conference. They did a research project, supervised by Professor Darin White, on how fan engagement with college and professional football teams relates to price sensitivity toward tickets, jerseys, and other team merchandise. Based on survey data they collected and analyzed, they found an inverse correlation between total fan engagement and price sensitivity. The students presented their results at the conference, and because the Women’s World Cup (a different kind of football) was going on at the same time in Ottawa, they attended two games with other NASSM Conference speakers.
New Building and Student Business Incubator

The Brock School will have a new home when classes begin on August 17th. The Business building will provide a state-of-the-art facility for research, teaching, and community events. A grand opening celebration is scheduled for September 4th from 1:00 to 3:00 p.m. and will be one of the events for Birmingham Innovation Week 2015. Everyone is invited to attend.

A few sponsorship opportunities are still available in the building including classrooms, computer labs, breakout rooms, and the new Brock School Student Incubator. The Incubator will provide a place where students can work, relax, meet with customers, receive mentorship, and have access to the Brock School’s 3D printer as they work to launch their fledgling businesses (see http://bit.ly/Bizincubator415 for the Spring Incubator newsletter).

Please contact Devon Davidson, Brock School Advancement Officer (ddavidso@samford.edu or 205-726-4108) for more information.

New Professional Sales Program

Brock School faculty have continued to add innovative curricular and co-curricular activities to enhance the entrepreneurship, management, and marketing programs. One major highlight from this year was the new Professional Sales concentration.

This concentration builds on two sales classes offered in the Brock School for the past several years. Longtime Brock School Dean’s Advisory Board member Bill Dixon developed and taught these classes (see http://bit.ly/SalesHonor).

Professor Clif Eason took the lead in expanding these two classes into a four-course concentration this year. In Spring 2015, he developed and taught a course in customer relationship management (CRM) as a required class in the concentration. In addition, students take an internship as part of the concentration and can choose a marketing or entrepreneurship class as an elective.

Because of its comprehensiveness, the program has already received national recognition as a “Notable Program” by the Sales Education Foundation (see http://bit.ly/SalesProg2015).
Current Student Profile: Michael Fitzpatrick

Mike Fitzpatrick, an entrepreneurship and finance major from Chicago, took a $100 loan in the ENTR 304 class in Spring 2015 and started Bands4Cure, a business selling multicolor silicon wristbands that also raised money for cancer research. The first band he created, “Team Tammy,” honored his mother, who passed away from breast cancer during the semester. He sold $4,400 worth of bands by the time the class ended in May, and, in the process, donated $2,200 to cancer research. Through some persistent networking, he was able to send a band to Iman Shumpert of the Cleveland Cavaliers, who wore it on the court (see http://bit.ly/TeamTammy2015).

Bands4Cure was a semifinalist in the 2015 Regions New Venture Challenge, and because of his success, Mike received an invitation to be a resident in the Brock School Student Business Incubator.

Faculty Profile: Barbara Cartledge and Matt Mazzei

EMM professors won both of the Brock School’s Teaching Awards in 2014-2015. Professors Barbara Cartledge and Matt Mazzei won the Excellence in Undergraduate and Graduate Teaching Awards, respectively. In addition, Professors Art Carden (Economics) won the Excellence in Scholarship Award, and Tom Woolley (Quantitative Analysis) won the Excellence in Service Award.

Alumnus Profile: Jeff Stevens

Jeff Stephens graduated from the Brock School of Business in 2004. He went to work for 365 Inc in Birmingham and became Director of Marketing and Business Development. His job duties included managing the company’s flagship stores, WorldSoccerShop.com and WorldRugbyShop.com, as well partner stores for Major League Soccer, Chelsea FC, Arsenal Football Club, FC Barcelona, Manchester United, AC Milan, and New Zealand All Blacks.

He was promoted to General Manager in 2012 and selected as Samford University’s Outstanding Young Alumnus in 2013. He actively recruits for the University, guest lectures and critiques presentations in Brock School entrepreneurship classes, as well as serves annually as a judge for the New Venture Challenge Business Plan Competition. He is also an inaugural member of the EMM Department Advisory Board. In addition, 365 Inc regularly hires Brock School students for internships and sponsors an annual scholarship for the School’s marketing students.
In memoriam: Harry B. Brock, Jr.

As this Newsletter goes to press, we are saddened by the news that one of Samford University’s greatest supporters and benefactors, Harry B. Brock, Jr., passed away on July 29th at the age of 89.

Mr. Brock was a banking pioneer, who founded Central Bank in Birmingham in 1964. Over the next several decades, he helped transform Birmingham into a regional banking hub and usher in the era of intra- and interstate banking. The story of how he launched Central Bank, "A competitive spirit," is required reading in the Brock School’s entrepreneurship program.

He became a Samford University Trustee in 1962 and served for more than 50 years in this role. Because of his service, the School of Business was renamed the Brock School of Business in 2007 (see http://bit.ly/HarryBrock).

Mr. Brock gave tirelessly of his time and resources to the Brock School. He was a favorite speaker in the BUSA 100 course for many years where he discussed life lessons as well as the importance and challenges of entrepreneurship. He also enabled many Samford students to pursue their university studies through scholarships he provided.

His support was instrumental for many of the successful initiatives in the Brock School, including several in the entrepreneurship program. Indeed, his support for this program enabled many of the successes it has enjoyed since launching in 2007 (see next page).

Through these and many other efforts, he was able, as President Westmoreland so eloquently said during Mr. Brock’s eulogy, "to touch eternity before he entered into it."

Out and About

Professor Larry Harper served as Professor-in-Residence at Samford’s Daniel House in London this past spring where he taught classes in international management and marketing. As part of the classes, students enjoyed visiting local businesses and listening to guest speakers, including Ted and Kelly Alling (center of picture), who discussed entrepreneurship and Christian values with the class in March.

Brock School economics professor, Jeremy Thornton, and Samford University Chief Marketing Officer, Betsy Holloway, took social entrepreneurship students to Rwanda during Jan Term 2015. Mann Center Program Manager and Brock School alumnus, Cameron Collins (far left in the picture), who spent time working in Rwanda between his undergraduate and graduate studies at the Brock School, also accompanied the students. As part of their class, they learned about projects, including hydroelectric power and microfinance, that organizations are using in Rwanda to help reduce poverty (see http://bit.ly/JanTerm2015 for more details).
